- Onbashira Festival (Nagano), Japan
- Timing: April–May (every 6 years)
- Core act: Massive tree trunks are felled in the mountains and erected as sacred pillars at shrine corners.
- These logs function as living pillars — temporary renewals of the shrine's spiritual backbone. The drama (people literally riding the logs downhill) masks a very old idea: renew the world by re-raising its axis.

- Closely related concepts appear throughout Shinto:
- Shinboku (sacred trees)
- Hashira (pillars as spiritual supports)
- Temporary poles erected for kami to descend

- Dong, Miao, Zhuang peoples (Southwest China)
- Timing: Late spring (often April–May)
- Rituals include:
  - Raising tall decorated poles or trees
  - Singing and courtship dances around them
  - Prayers for fertility and harvest

- Underlying mythic layer:
- The Cosmic Tree (Jianmu) connecting Heaven and Earth
- Birds, ancestors, or spirits descending via the tree
- These poles act as temporary world-bridges, not permanent monuments.

- Assam — Bohag Bihu in India
- Timing: April (spills into early May)
- Features:
  - Bamboo poles
  - Community dancing
  - Fertility and agricultural renewal
- Wider Indic symbolism
- Ashvattha (sacred fig) as world-tree
- Stambha (cosmic pillar) in Vedic thought
- Temporary poles erected during village rites to invite deities
- Again: vertical axis, seasonal renewal, community gathering.

Across Thailand, Laos, Cambodia, and Vietnam:
Village spirit poles (lak muang, phi poles)
Often renewed before planting season (April–May)
Decorated with cloth, flowers, offerings
These are believed to:
Anchor protective spirits
Ensure fertility of land and people
Mark the village as a living organism
They're less playful than European Maypoles — more protective — but structurally identical.

- Melanesia (Papua New Guinea, Solomon Islands)
- Tall carved poles used in initiation and fertility rites
- Represent ancestors and cosmic order
- Polynesia & Micronesia
- Decorated trees or poles during:
  - First-fruits ceremonies
  - Seasonal transitions (often May–June)
- Trees seen as genealogical ladders between gods and humans
- Unlike Europe, the emphasis is ancestral rather than erotic — but the geometry is the same.

A ritual to lift of the sacred Ceiba Tree happened in 1200 bC, In Izapa, Chiapas.

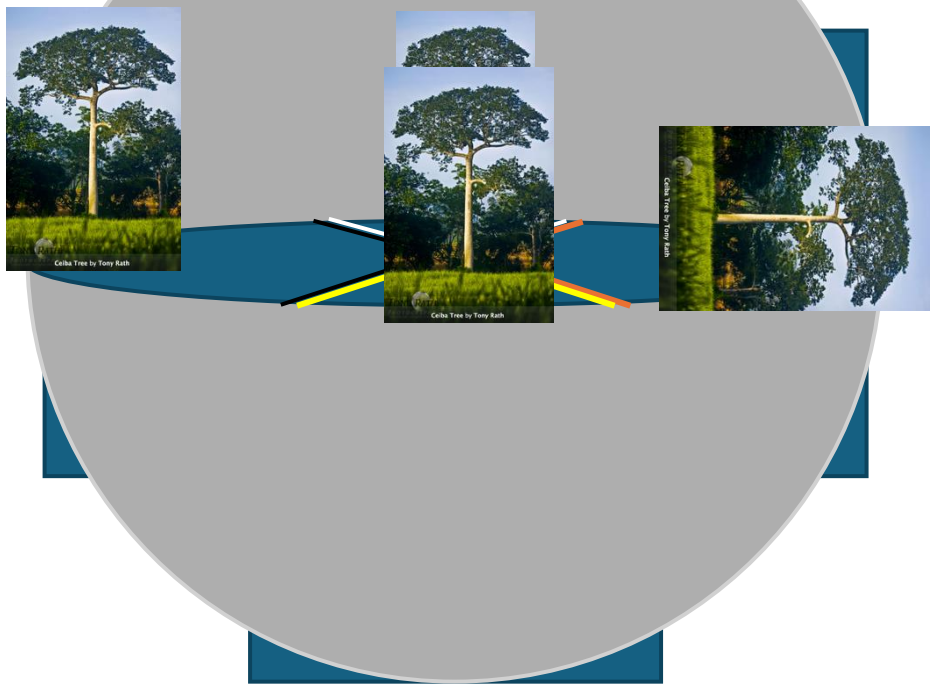
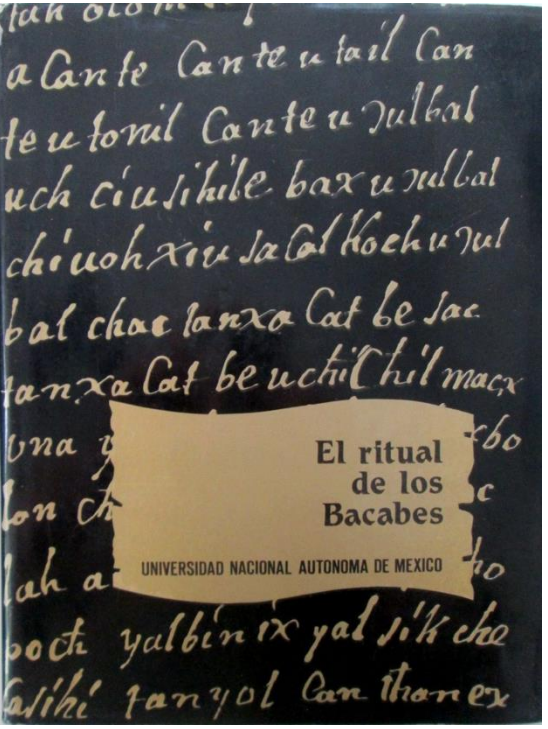
Five Bacab – Ceiba trees had held up the Maya world for close to four-hundred years.



Olmecs and Maya chose to witness the falling of a sacred Ceiba tree at the closing of 13 Bak’tun on May 3, 2013.

For the next thirteen years, Mother Earth and Humanity would go through a purging process to prepare for the New Dawn.



The Ritual of the Bacabs text of the Maya says,

After the destruction of thirteen years,

The New Dawn will come

Chac Imix Che Will be lifted,
The first Red Ceiba,
Hevenly Column,
A sign of the Dawning of the world

Sac Imix che
Will also be lifted
The White Ceiba Tree

Ek Imix che
Will also be lifted
The first Black Ceiba
On the West of the Lowlands

Kan Imix che
Will also be lifted
The first Yellow Ceiba
On the South of the Lowlands

Yaax Imix che,
Will also be lifted,
The first Green Ceiba,
In the central region,
In remembrance of the destruction
